INTERNATIONAL LAW ASSOCIATION

AMERICAN BRANCH

EST. 1922

Welcome to ILW 2022

The American Branch of the International Law Association welcomes you to its annual International Law Weekend (ILW) conference. Held during the Branch's centennial year, the theme of ILW 2022 is The Next 100 Years of International Law.

International Law Weekend 2022 invites reflection on the past and future of international law. Which foundations from the last century of international law should remain in the next century and which should be reimagined? Today, the international legal order faces extraordinary challenges—threats to the peace, persistent economic and social inequalities, environmental and global health risks, and populist isolationism. Yet there are also many ways that international law has succeeded over the past century in resolving differences, keeping the peace, protecting human rights, and facilitating human flourishing. Present circumstances offer the opportunity to reevaluate the core features of international law. The Branch's centennial ILW will explore the areas of international law that offer robust solutions and those that require reinvention.

ILW 2022 will consider these issues through a diverse collection of engaging and provocative panels and plenary sessions. The audience includes practitioners, academics, U.N. diplomats, business leaders, federal and state government officials, NGO leaders, journalists, students, and interested persons. There is a broad array of both public international law and private international law topics in each program time slot.

ILW 2022 opens at the New York City Bar Association on Thursday, October 20, 2022 with welcome remarks from Professor Christine Chinkin (Chair, International Law Association) and a President's High Level Opening Plenary Panel. Moderated by American Branch President Leila Nadya Sadat, plenary speakers include: H.E. Dr. Fatou Bensouda (Gambia High Commissioner to The United Kingdom and the Commonwealth); Mr. Miguel de Serpa Soares (U.N. Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs); Dr. Christopher Ward SC (Immediate-Past President & Vice-President, International Law Association); and Judge Ganna Yudkivska (European Court of Human Rights (2010-2022)). An Opening Reception will follow, sponsored by Debevoise & Plimpton LLP.

The Thursday night program continues with a Centennial Gala (advance ticket purchase required) at White & Case LLP featuring a keynote address by H.E. Judge Abdulqawi Ahmed Yusuf (International Court of Justice).

The conference continues at Fordham University School of Law on Friday and Saturday, October 21-22, 2022, and features 35 panels on a range of topics. Keynote speakers include H.E. Ambassador Beth Van Schaack (Ambassador-at-Large for Global Criminal Justice); H.E. Justice Richard Goldstone (former Justice, Constitutional Court of South Africa; former Chief Prosecutor, U.N. International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda); and Professor Adrien Wing (Associate Dean for International and Comparative Law Programs and the Bessie Dutton Murray Professor, Iowa University College of Law). These events are open to all conference attendees. ILW 2022 also features community and committee networking rooms and opportunities to meet with legal book publishers. The Friday night program concludes with a U.N. Mission Reception (advance ticket purchase required).

The Saturday program includes the 100th Annual Members Meeting, Elections, and Award Ceremony. The Annual Meeting is open to members and non-members alike, however only members can vote. The program also includes a Career Session for Students and Young Lawyers.

Multiple panels in every timeslot are designated for continuing legal education (CLE) credit. CLE credit is offered to all ILW attendees at no additional cost through the sponsorship and assistance of White & Case LLP, which is an accredited provider of New York and California CLE credit. Attorneys licensed in other states can apply for CLE credit in their own jurisdiction using the New York CLE certificate provided by White & Case LLP. Please collect a CLE form from the registration desk and add the CLE code(s) provided by the moderator at the panels you attend. Return the completed CLE form to the registration desk at the conclusion of the conference.

About the American Branch

The American Branch of the International Law Association is dedicated to the study, clarification and development of International Law and the advancement of peace, equity and justice worldwide. It is a diverse and inclusive community of individuals working or interested in international law. The Branch unites practitioners, academics, students, government officials, diplomats, and members of international and nongovernmental organizations. Members work together on committees to issue reports, amicus briefs, and letters to Congress, federal agencies, the United Nations, and other international organizations on a range of current and evolving topics.

The American Branch is part of a truly international organization. The International Law Association was established in 1873 and is composed of sixty-three national branches (including the Headquarters Branch). It is the preeminent international non-governmental organization involved in developing and restating international law. The American Branch nominates members – both leading U.S. international lawyers and early career professionals – to participate in ILA committees. The opportunity to help prepare draft treaties or studies in collaboration with leading international lawyers and academics from around the world is vital to furthering an understanding of international law. Committee members and others who attend the ILA's biennial international conferences find their involvement with the ILA to be immensely rewarding.

The American Branch has its own committees, which allow members to combine service and academic or advocacy work. These committees are unusual in terms of the range of opportunities they provide for member-initiated projects, and there are opportunities for student involvement as well. The American Branch's committees – unlike the Branch as a whole – may advocate for specific positions on international legal issues. Committees have filed amicus briefs in appellate cases and communicated with government officials on a variety of issues. Branch committees also engage in traditional, rigorous academic work, sometimes undertaking projects that complement the work of parallel international ILA committees, and sometimes developing their own projects.

The Branch performs exceptional educational and professional service through its national and regional International Law Weekends. Other international law organizations also hold major national conferences, of course, but none follow the Branch's lead in offering low admission price to members of the organization, to members of cosponsoring organizations, and free admission to students. ILW provides significant opportunities for attendees to learn from and meet top international lawyers from private practices, academia, the government, nongovernmental organizations, the United Nations, and other international organizations.

Members are encouraged to send information about their accomplishments, honors, projects and publications to the Branch for inclusion in our newsletter, which is distributed to thousands of individuals every year. In addition, members have the opportunity to take on leadership roles in the organization, whether it is joining a committee, serving on the board or a board committee, taking an active role in organizing a Regional ILW or other event, or starting a new committee or study group.

Join the American Branch Today!

Membership opens a world of intellectual and professional engagement opportunities at a reasonable price.

Value for members includes:

- ◆ Invitation to join in the work of the Branch's twenty Committees and Study Groups
- ◆ A discounted rate for International Law Weekend (free registration for students)
- ◆ Participation in the Branch's regional meetings
- ◆ Participation in ILA Biennials and other ILA regional conferences

*The evolving U.S. approach to international immunities continues to offer challenges and opportunities for international law teachers and practitioners, especially the applicability of international law in the U.S. legal system. With the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) at the fulcrum of immunities determination, three recent cases pose the following questions: (1) What immunities should international organizations enjoy in the wake of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Jam v. IFC; (2) whether "agencies and instrumentalities" of foreign states are subject to criminal prosecution notwithstanding the FSIA (U.S. v. Turkiye Halk Bankasi); and (3) whether blocked assets of the Afghan central bank are vulnerable to attachment in aid of enforcing U.S. terrorism judgements) (In re Terrorist Attacks on Sept. 11, 2001)(now pending in the S.D.N.Y.) The panelists will discuss how to address these questions, as well as the relationship between international law and national law with respect to international immunities.*

the Law of the Sea

Sir Cecil Hurst asked this question in 1923, examining the legal basis of claims to nearshore, shallow-water, sedentary living marine resources (e.g., pearl oysters), one of the only commercially interesting "fructus of the soil" (Hurst's words) of the seabed at that time. Much has changed in the ensuing century: technological advances have permitted exploitation of new resources, including deep water hydrocarbons and thermophilic organisms, and international rules have emerged and evolved, such as the regimes of the continental shelf and deep seabed. But still, Hurst's question reverberates: continental shelf outer limits remain undelineated, marine genetic resources in areas beyond national jurisdiction are unregulated, Article 82 payments and contributions have yet to be tested, and the rules for equitable sharing of benefits derived from deep seabed mining are still in formation. This panel will look at the past, present, and future of ownership over, benefits from, and control of "the bed of the sea."

On June 24, 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court issued Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization, overturning Roe v. Wade and eviscerating the constitutional right to abortion in the United States. In its wake, at least 22 U.S. states enacted legislation banning or severely restricting abortion access. Dobbs decisively brings the United States out of line with international law standards. Numerous international and regional treaties and bodies—including the U.N. Human Rights Committee, the World Health Organization, and regional human rights courts—recognize access to safe abortion as a human right. Globally, national abortion laws have overwhelmingly trended toward liberalization in the last fifty years. This panel will discuss the next 100 years of reproductive rights, not only in the United States but more broadly around the world. Will the Dobbs decision herald a wave of restrictions in other countries, or will liberalization trends hold steady? And how can advocates leverage international law mechanisms to ensure continued access to safe abortions?

This year marks the 30th anniversary of the U.S. ratification of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). What has been the impact of this ratification on U.S. domestic and foreign policy? What are the lessons learned from the ICCPR ratification and lack of domestic implementation? The panel will assess the U.S. record (both domestically and internationally) as a State Party to the ICCPR and examine the prospects for new treaty ratification without or with limited Reservations, Understandings and Declarations (RUDs) as well as other possible avenues for domestic implementation and enforcement of the ICCPR and other ratified treaties including in domestic courts. What are the solutions to the current impasse on this front? Is it fair to say human rights treaties are obsolete or are there are still possible future avenues and hope for legal and/or policy changes influenced by U.S. treaty obligations? Would the creation of a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) help bridge the implementation gap?

International
Law

For over 100 years, customary international law has played an important role in virtually all areas regulated by international law. Nevertheless, doubts persist about its place in a legal world in which treaties and written agreements play an ever-growing part, and in which other “sources” of law, including various forms of “soft law,” such as resolutions of international organizations, are increasingly referred to by courts and legal advisers. This panel will critically examine what role customary international law can and should play in the next 100 years in light of this expanding universe of sources of law, with a particular focus on the fields of the international law of armed conflict and international human rights law.

International trade, and the World Trade Organization (WTO), have been the subject of intense criticism for failure sufficiently to address climate change, other environmental problems, distribution of medicines, gender, inequality, poverty, and labor rights, among others. This panel will describe and present preliminary results of a multi-researcher project to understand the dynamics of the factual and institutional relationship between the international trade system and these issues, and to evaluate possible reforms designed to improve the integration of governance in the world system between the commercial and the non-commercial, in order to serve better during the next 100 years.

10:30-11:45 am Practicum: Human Rights Claims and Counterclaims in International Energy Arbitrations

Room 2-02A

Approved for
CLE

This practicum will showcase how current ESG trends in the energy industry can lend themselves to human rights claims and counterclaims in international energy arbitrations. It will focus on a scenario of alleged violations of the right to water as well as rights of indigenous peoples. It plays through a scenario in which a multinational energy company has entered into a production-sharing agreement with the national petroleum company. The production-sharing agreement contemplates the development of unconventional oil and gas reserves (hydraulic fracturing). Hydraulic fracturing requires produced water to be reinjected. The multinational oil company reinjects produced water in compliance with domestic environmental law and with the approval of the state-owned oil company. An indigenous people at odds with the government asserts that reinjection of the produced water contaminates groundwater and protests. At first, the government rejects these claims but after protests at the project sight turn violent and spark national protests, the government arrests leading employees of the multinational oil company, convicts and sentences them without access to counsel, and causes the national petroleum company to terminate the production sharing agreement. There is a bilateral investment treaty in place that facially covers the investment. In the practicum, the parties will raise claims and counterclaims under the production-sharing agreement and bilateral investment treaty.

Committee on the Use of Force

In light of Russia's violation of the U.N. Charter, this panel will consider the possibilities for prosecuting Russian military and civilian leaders for the crime of aggression. Specific models will be discussed, including the creation of an ad hoc tribunal agreed upon between the U.N. and Ukraine, and recommended by the General Assembly. The panel will also consider the limited jurisdictional regime that presently exists for the International Criminal Court's investigation and prosecution of the crime of aggression, and potential ways in which that jurisdiction could be expanded in the future. It will also consider the geopolitical risks to the international system of failing to pursue individual criminal responsibility for the crime, which enforces the core foundation non-aggression provision in Article 2(4) of the U.N. Charter.

Room 2-02C

Approved for
CLE

Many civil wars are now ended by comprehensive peace agreements. Unlike inter-State peace treaties of the past, however, the new civil war agreements have an uncertain relationship to international law. On the one hand, because they have non-State parties, they do not meet the traditional definition of treaties. On the other, they are often facilitated and partially implemented by international organizations, as well as incorporate widely accepted international law principles on human rights, elections, anti-corruption, border stability, and more. This panel will assess the uncertain legal status of civil war peace agreements. Speakers will highlight differences from traditional inter-State agreements, explore the role of international actors in the new agreements, examine the important case of the Colombian peace accord, ask how the agreements have been interpreted, and explore what accounts for higher and lower rates of incorporating international legal principles.

10:30-11:45 am The ILC's Work on Jus Cogens: Does Regional Jus Cogens Exist?

Room 2-02B

The International Law Commission (ILC) appointed Mr. Dire Tladi in 2015 as Special Rapporteur for the topic "Jus cogens." The purpose of the work was to adopt "draft conclusions" on the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The draft conclusions were adopted by the ILC this past summer and include an annex with a non-exhaustive list of jus cogens norms. This panel will address the project's contributions, as well as gaps in the text and challenges posed by it. Gaps include, for example, the (non) treatment of regional jus cogens and modification. Challenges may include the problem of auto-interpretation, in particular, as it pertains to U.N. Security Council resolutions. Whether the recent crises, including the war in Ukraine, reveal the limits of jus cogens may also be a topic for reflection.

Climate change remains a vexing problem, despite scientific evidence unequivocally identifying very severe consequences in the absence of significant reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. From the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) to last year's Glasgow Pact, science played a crucial role in collaborative climate action among all countries. This panel will examine the role of current scientific evidence in galvanizing such action considering recent developments in climate governance and their impact on, for example, developing nations and gender inclusion. Ultimately, the panel will assess whether the natural and social sciences may raise distrust or if they provide momentum for cooperation among international actors today.

From Policy Back to Principles: Refugee Protection under International Law & State (Non)-Compliance

Room 2-02B

Approved for
CLE

In the face of the world's largest refugee numbers since World War II, this panel will examine whether the international community should (re)consider establishing a specialized global court or mechanism for enforcing refugee protection under international law. Different types of mechanisms have been proposed in the last 2 decades. While the proposals vary, they fail to seriously assess the idea of a mechanism with authority to make binding decisions. Further, these proposals often adopt a narrow definition of refugee protection. Now, 70 years on from adoption of the 1951 Refugee Convention, emphasis has shifted to an approach to refugee protection centered on soft law implementation of responsibility sharing, with the adoption by States of the non-binding 2016 New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants and 2018 Global Compact on Refugees. As the second Global Refugee Forum approaches in 2023 and, given the limited success of such efforts to date in the face of rapid influx of refugees from Afghanistan and Ukraine for example, this panel will discuss whether now might be the time for re-thinking a more legal approach to enhancing refugee protection under international law, focused on centralized enforcement of principles as a global public good. In addressing the question, this panel will consider what the relationship might be to existing global governance strategies.

The Crimes against Humanity Treaty: Looking Ahead

Room 2-02C

Approved for
CLE

The absence of an international convention on crimes against humanity is a critical gap in the international legal framework that creates an artificial hierarchy between egregious crimes. The Rome Statute is the only international codification of crimes against humanity, and neither requires States to criminalize the offense nor provides a mechanism for prevention or inter-State cooperation. Building upon the work of the Crimes Against Humanity Initiative, the International Law Commission has elaborated and finalized a set of Draft Articles on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Humanity to close the impunity gap. The Draft Articles have languished in the U.N. Sixth Committee for the past three years due to opposition from a handful of States, raising questions not only about the prospects for this important new treaty, but on the effectiveness of the United Nations itself, the Sixth Committee, and the International Law Commission. This panel will explore the merits (and limits) of the proposed new treaty, the obstacles to its adoption, and creative ways forward as it reflects upon how a new treaty on crimes against humanity fits within the next "100 years" of international law.

Reforming the U.N. Security Council to Address Modern Challenges

Room 2-01B

Approved for
CLE

The Security Council's failure to intervene in the war in Ukraine, in addition to other recent gridlocks, has prompted renewed efforts to reform the body so that it may better fulfill its mission of upholding global peace and security. The General Assembly adopted a resolution in April to hold the five permanent members of the Security Council accountable for using their veto. Co-sponsored by France, the United Kingdom, and the United States, the resolution requires a General Assembly debate to take place on any situation regarding which a veto is cast. France has also led an initiative for the permanent members to commit to refrain from exercising the right to veto in the event of mass atrocities. In addition to veto reform, other proposals have suggested expanding the Security Council's permanent and non-permanent membership, including by improving regional representation. This panel will explore the existing and possible proposals for reforming the Security Council, consider the obstacles to reform initiatives, and reflect on how those changes—or lack thereof—will affect the role of the United Nations in the next 100 years of international law.

International
Trade Law

Which foundations of international trade law should remain and which should be reimaged? In recent years, geopolitical tensions have increased and trade relations between many States have become strained. What could or should trade architecture look like? To what extent can there be a stable, global trade regime in the context of competition, territorial disputes, or war among proxies of powerful States? Should there be a global trade regime? Should there be a trade regime open only to countries that meet specified economic or political criteria? What impact do such choices have on trade in high-value transport, auto, and aerospace products and supply chains? What should be the guiding principles of the various regimes and relationships among them?

United Nations Law

After 20 years of negotiations, Member States of the United Nations convened in August 2022 to conclude a treaty on marine biodiversity in the high seas and international seabed Area beyond national jurisdiction. The treaty area accounts for half of the Earth's surface but has been little understood or explored for its biodiversity, and thus remained largely under-protected. Getting countries together to agree to a global regime to enforce a conservation and sustainable use treaty has not been easy. As the future of the planet may well rest on the treaty, the fifth session of the conference was paused as negotiators ran out of time. With significant progress made, the next crucial steps rest on concluding the treaty, its prompt entry into force and effective implementation. This panel explores the issues at stake, negotiating positions and challenges.

Room 2-01B

Approved for
CLE

The past two years have witnessed important challenges from the potentially harmful unintended consequences of international efforts to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. Centered on the Financial Action Task Force, these international initiatives set non-binding international standards that are implemented at the domestic level by national governments. But some of the governments tasked with implementation have been accused of misimplementation or even of using the standards to lend a patina of legitimacy to crackdowns on civil society and other misuse of the standards. This panel will address the extent of these problems, possible solutions to them, and lessons that may be drawn for the broader regulatory architecture for international banking and finance.

The Cybercrime-Cyberwar Continuum: State Responsibility and Accountability for Cyberattacks under International Law

As recent events in Ukraine demonstrate, inter-State conflicts increasingly unfold on the cyber plane. Yet it remains unclear what this new era of hybrid cyber-kinetic warfare means for State responsibility and accountability under international humanitarian law. In part, this is due to the challenges of distinguishing an inter-State cyber “act of war” from “cybercrime” by private actors. This panel will first discuss the cybercrime-cyberwar continuum, identifying factors that might bring a cyberattack within the scope of IHL. Within that framework, it will then examine unanswered questions of State responsibility and accountability for cyberattacks, such as: obligations to prevent private actors from carrying out cyberattacks on another State, or to prevent harm to civilians; navigating the line between conduct that is permissible under IHL but impermissible under IHRL or otherwise outside of an armed conflict; prospects for an international agreement on inter-State cyberattacks, including the “cybercrime” treaty under consideration at the UN; and hurdles for pursuing accountability in international legal fora.

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties in Investor-State Disputes: History, Evolution, and Future

*In the decades since it entered into force, the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (VCLT) has had a profound influence in investor-State disputes. This field is only likely to become more relevant to understanding the operation of the VCLT’s rules in the coming decades, and the VCLT will, in turn, impact and shape opportunities for the practice of investment arbitration into the future. This program explores emerging themes at the intersection of the VCLT and investor-State disputes in a roundtable format and draws on ideas elaborated in the recently published book, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties in Investor-State Disputes: History, Evolution, and Future, edited by Esmé Shirlow & Kiran Nasir Gore (Kluwer, 2022).*

International environmental law movements comprise of three eras: the conservationist cycle beginning in the late nineteenth century, the pollution-prevention cycle starting in the mid-twentieth century and spanning the time of the 'environmental revolution', and the sustainable development phase emerging in the 1980s and continuing into the twenty-first century. As climate change unleashes its fury on current and future generations, international environmental law will be an imperative tool over the next 100 years. The fourth environmental era needs to be bold – it must center on climate justice. Reimagining the System of World Organization: Are the UN's Principal Organs Performing Their Tasks?

Room 2-01B

Approved for
CLE

It has recently become apparent that there is considerable room for reimagination of the roles, capacities, and jurisdiction of the UN's principal organs. This provides a diverse set of answers to the question: How well suited are the Security Council, the General Assembly, and the International Court of Justice to perform the vital tasks of the pursuit of common goals that they were originally set up to address? Changing dynamics have combined to bring the question of Security Council reform to the fore. The recent General Assembly resolution A/RES/76/262, for example, aims to hold the permanent Council members accountable before the Assembly when they use the veto. Has the time come to reimagine aspects of the division of labor of the organs of the United Nations and to take a hard look at whether their powers and functions need to be better demarcated as between them?

Room 2-02B

Leveraging international law to tackle the scourge of systemic racism may be one of the greatest challenges facing the cannon in the next one hundred years. Many treaty instruments focus attention on acts of discrimination rather than systems of domination. With the renewed attention to racism triggered by the Movement for Black Lives (M4BL) and the Human Rights Council's decision to establish an international independent expert mechanism on systemic racism for a period of three years, uncovering international law's contributions to challenge racism more effectively, including prosecuting the crime of apartheid, feels urgent. While initially coined by the perpetrators to describe the racial segregation practiced in Southern Africa, the Rome Statute lists apartheid among the crimes against humanity within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. Today, in contexts across the world, human rights organizations, U.N. bodies, experts, and scholars have concluded that the crime of apartheid is being committed with impunity. This panel tackles how apartheid intersects with notions of systemic racism and discrimination in international law.

International law is formed through an iterative process of action and reaction. The evolution of international law is thus inherently a public process. Yet, a great deal of the practice of States, courts, and organizations is classified. When behavior occurs in the shadows, what weight should it be given? This panel will bring together academics and practitioners to examine such issues as the legal effects of secret treaties, the role that secret State practice plays in the evolution of custom, the centrality of NDAs and gag orders in national security proceedings, the place of anonymity and confidentiality in the work of international criminal courts and humanitarian organizations, and the evolution of rules governing cyber, counterterrorism, espionage, and covert action operations.

Room 2-02A

The Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) is the multistakeholder organization that maintains arguably the most important innovation in the last century: the Internet. Yet, ICANN has no true governmental oversight; the regulatory body is, essentially, in charge of itself. To help its self-governance, ICANN created a unique set of accountability mechanisms based on a bespoke form of international arbitration. This panel will consider several of these accountability mechanisms; whether these mechanisms successfully adapt international arbitration norms and procedures to establish oversight and accountability for ICANN's actions and inactions; and whether ICANN should implement any changes to these mechanisms to ensure that it complies with its obligations and international norms.

Room 2-01A

Approved for

As we celebrate 40 years of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, this panel will discuss the questions arising under the Convention that are most likely to impact the international community over the coming decades. For example, as sea levels rise, affected States are considering declaring and freezing their baselines in an attempt to preserve their maritime rights before depletion of their land territory, which brings to the forefront whether the long-established principle of the “land dominates the sea” will stand the test of time. And with technological advancements, the ocean-based blue economy and exploration of seabed minerals has led to a battle for marine resources, raising questions of security measures and sovereign rights at sea, including whether these novel issues need us to re-think the basic principles of the law of the sea. The panel will also consider if and how international organizations such as the Commission of Small Island States, the Pacific Islands Forum, the Alliance of Small Island States, the International Law Commission, and the European Union can play a part in protecting States’ rights and settling conflicts.

Room 2-01B

Approved for

In February 2022, Russian forces invaded Ukraine. Numerous discussions relevant to accountability for Russian leaders have already taken place. This panel will explore specific avenues for accountability for senior Russian leaders for crimes committed in Ukraine. Panelists will discuss different accountability mechanisms, such as the International Criminal Court, national-level prosecutions under the principle of universal jurisdiction, and the possibility of establishing an ad hoc hybrid tribunal for Ukraine. Panelists will also draw parallels and discuss comparisons between the Ukraine context and other situations, such as the ongoing conflict in Syria, as well as past accountability mechanisms in the former Yugoslavia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Lebanon, and others. In addition, panelists will discuss issues of transitional justice relevant in the Ukrainian conflict and the importance of accountability within the overall transitional justice process. Finally, panelists will focus on ways in which the United States, as well as other States, can support Ukrainian accountability efforts.

12:00-1:15 pm	Prosecuting Sexual and Gender-Based Crimes at the ICC: An Expert Roundtable
Room 2-02B	This panel will discuss the International Criminal Court (ICC) Office of the Prosecutor's (OTP) proposed Gender Persecution Policy. At present, the jurisprudence on gender-based persecution is relatively undeveloped in international criminal law. The OTP's commitment to implementing a Gender Persecution Policy, however, would allow the ICC to take a leadership role in ending impunity for the perpetrators of gender-based persecution. A broadly formulated and inclusive Gender Persecution Policy could do much to aid in protecting marginalized and oppressed groups who are the victims of this crime. The panelists will discuss the importance of taking a broad and inclusive view of the meaning of "gender"; recognizing the guidance that others areas of law, such as refugee law, may provide in determining the range of acts that constitute gender-based persecution; developing a robust victim participation scheme at every stage of a gender persecution prosecution; and ensuring that intersectionality and defense arguments of cultural relativism are properly considered in the prosecution of gender-based persecution.

12:00-1:15 pm	The Legitimacy and Fundamental Principles of International Human Rights Law
Room 2-02C	The respect for and protection of universal human rights has long been seen as one of the primary tests and measures of the legitimacy of law and government everywhere. Already in the time of Grotius and Vattel, but with increasing sophistication and frequency since the Second World War, lawyers have cited universal rights and international legal standards to challenge oppressive Empires and States. Yet at the same time, strong traditions of realism and positivism in international relations have threatened the legal status of individual rights, to elevate the power and sovereignty of States at the expense of their subjects. This panel will consider the legitimacy and fundamental principles of international human rights law, the sources and evidence of human rights, their binding power, and the possible role human rights protections play in supporting the legitimacy of international law and international legal institutions as a whole.

In recent years, States have increasingly used the principle of airspace sovereignty as a tool of coercive diplomacy for reasons that are not always linked to aviation, threatening the stability of the Chicago Convention regime for international civil aviation established in 1944. This panel seeks to consider the legal basis of airspace restrictions in international aviation, the operational and commercial challenges they impose on airlines including the economic and social side effects, and the range of dispute settlement mechanisms that are available to States: from consultations and negotiations under the auspices of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), to formal proceedings before the ICAO Council and the International Court of Justice (ICJ), ad hoc arbitration, and claims based on racial discrimination.

2:30-3:45 pm Should Climate Change Be Framed as a Security Issue?

Room 2-02C

The panel will discuss and debate, with audience participation, whether and how climate change should be characterized as a security issue. Climate change poses a threat to human civilization. Some argue that it is a threat to national and international security and needs to be treated as such. Others argue that this will simply "securitize" the response, undermining rights and the rule of law, and exacerbating collective action problems. Still others argue that it should be framed as an issue of security, be it human or global security, in order to prioritize claims to resources and authority needed to address the problem. The question is essential to how we can best deploy international law and institutions to tackle an urgent global crisis.

The Rush for Resources: International Legal Implications of Space Mining

Room 2-01B

Global competition for natural resources now extends beyond earth. States and private companies are investing in developing technology to extract and utilize natural resources available beyond the earth's orbit, such as on the surfaces of the moon and nearby asteroids, through a process commonly referred to as "space mining." What implications does this new rush for space resources have for international law? Panelists will explore how international law addresses—and may evolve to address—issues related to space mining, including its very legality under the foundational multilateral space law treaties, its treatment in national laws and the political arrangements established under the Artemis Accords, and the basis for property rights over extracted materials.

Growing Threats to the Human Rights of U.S. Transgender & Intersex Children

Room 2-02B

Approved for
CLE

The 21st century has brought greater understanding that gender non-conformity is relatively common in the human population (an estimated 1 in 100 youth in the U.S. identify as transgender). Research on this population indicates that transgender children experience similar gender development profiles to cisgender children and have similar rates of depression and self-esteem if their gender identity is affirmed by their friends, families, and communities. If their identities are not affirmed, the risk of suicide and depression significantly increases. Society has responded by normalizing affirmation of transgender identities, including the development of health care protocols, but some politicians have reacted by introducing, and in some cases, banning, gender-affirming health care, and excluding transgender children from sports, bathrooms, and more. Parents and medical providers are currently being investigated for child abuse because they provided gender-affirming care to their children and/or patients. This panel will explore whether international human rights law provides a framework to defend the rights of transgender and intersex children in the domestic context of U.S. state legislation targeting transgender and intersex youth.
